Dashing through the Snow - Be Careful Driving this Winter

Winter Danger

Winter brings the worst roads and the most traffic accident injuries. December, January and February show the highest number of traffic deaths.

Think twice

According to the National Safety Council, drivers don't think about whether they should even get on the road when the weather is bad. Drivers should ask themselves, "Do I really have to make this trip now?"

Check weather reports

Check weather reports the night before you have to travel. If the forecast is bad, drivers need to get up at least an hour earlier than normal to check the weather again and decide whether to risk traveling.

Snow tires

I know they cost money. But snow tires provide an extra safety margin that even the best all-season tires cannot. Consider snow tires for the teenage driver in your family or your traveling college student. Please tell your family and friends about these important driving safety tips. Thank you.

Respectfully,

William C. Faber, Jr.

Also, here is a short newspaper article that describes my entry into the race for city council in Decatur.
